[Nov 12 2014, 7:05 PM] nrgmunguia: Hello All!

[Nov 12 2014, 7:05 PM] Paul Oh: Hi Nicole!

[Nov 12 2014, 7:17 PM] Paul Oh: It seems to me that libraries - particularly public libraries - have always been at the heart of an equity mission in a community.

[Nov 12 2014, 7:18 PM] Paul Oh: So it's great to hear that equity is also at the heart of this new call to action from YALSA.

[Nov 12 2014, 7:20 PM] LisaJordan44: Beyond helping youth just create their work, how do we make sure that they are also able to own their rights to their work?

[Nov 12 2014, 7:21 PM] Paul Oh: Great question, Lisa. I'd love the panel to tackle that one.

[Nov 12 2014, 7:22 PM] edinnovator: Thanks- we'll pose it to the group

[Nov 12 2014, 7:22 PM] Paul Oh: I was recently at an event with Jane Park from Creative Commons. And I think she would argue that we need a curriculum or a way for young people to learn about copyright, fair use, and creative commons licensing.

[Nov 12 2014, 7:23 PM] LisaJordan44: Paul I like that, along with what the panel said about encouraging interest based learning in teens.

[Nov 12 2014, 7:24 PM] Paul Oh: Yes, I completely agree, Lisa. Facilitating interest-driven learning gives kids motivation to want to own the rights to their work, I'm imagining.

[Nov 12 2014, 7:25 PM] LisaJordan44: I think that encouraging teens to take ownership of their work can be one way that classrooms and the library connect in a very small way

[Nov 12 2014, 7:28 PM] Paul Oh: I agree, Lisa. I'm not a librarian, but a former classroom teacher and I have always thought of the library as the place where young people can pursue their interests - and classroom teachers should leverage that possibility more.

[Nov 12 2014, 7:28 PM] Paul Oh: Particularly as libraries are changing into such an opportunity-rich space - maker spaces, for instance, and media-making centers.

advocacy for teens
[Nov 12 2014, 7:47 PM] LisaJordan44: We need to teach them how to advocate for themselves and own their own work. Thanks for responding for this
